Afterword

Hello, nice to meet you. My name is Teko.

Thank you very much for picking this up.

This time, I really wanted to portray the feelings of bitterness, sweetness, disgust, tenderness, and being lovey-dovey, so I worked hard on this piece.

The kanji of the title, "aikami", is normally read as "aikou".

It refers to leaving bite marks on your partner's skin due to intense feelings of affection.

I wanted to capture the feeling of, "I can't get enough of this! This is great!"

I hear that "aikami" appears in the Kama Sutra, so for those interested, please go ahead and Google it.

Also, I had to twist my dim-witted head real hard to come up with this theme.

I believe that in various communities, there are many moments where friends, lovers, and family members feel unclear or conflicted, without being able to say anything.

The anxiety of expressing something for someone else is genuinely scary.

Simply saying something isn't enough. It really is difficult.

I created this manga to remind myself of the importance of expressing yourself, rather than just expecting others to understand.

I hope this can encourage someone.

Finally, I'd like to thank everyone who supported and advised me during the production of this work, as well as Popls for their printing services.
